Celebrating Patriot Day

Bluffton High School honored local first responders during its annual Patriot's Day breakfast Monday morning. After the student council served breakfast to first responders, students lined the hallway to applaud and recognize the men and women's service to the community. Ossian discusses other opioid fund uses

Hannah's House, Cody and John Speak among appropriation options; Chief of Police salary discussed

By SYDNEY KENT

The Ossian Town Council meeting opened with a public hearing to consider the additional appropriation of opioid fund uses. Christine Walker, Director of Community Care of Northeast Indiana, was present to discuss the potential use of these funds for a new recovery home in Bluffton.

Hannah's House, a recovery home with the ability to serve seven women at one time, is projected to cost approximately $100,000 a year to operate. Unlike Grace and Mercy, residents will not be required to pay for services. Because of this, Walker said funding is critical. Hannah's House, ing event, Cody and John Speak, anticipated to open in October, is the which will take place at 7 p.m. Sept. only recovery home of its kind in 14, at the Wells County fairgrounds.

'What we found is we're missing a gap in our services," Walker explained. "Grace and Mercy is a home for women and children. We can only serve women 4-6 months out of active addiction there. Instead of sending away families to other cities, we decided to bridge this gap. Walker asked for a yearly financial commitment. The council agreed to look into the potential uses for the funds and discuss the topic at the next regular meeting.

The council unanimously approved a motion to pay $1,500 for the upcom-

"This seems to be an area ultimately that is getting worse and worse," Council President Josh Barkley said in regards to the rising number of individuals battling addiction. "This is what this event is for."

Police Commissioner Caleb Chichester updated the council on behalf of the Ossian Police Department Monday evening. Chichester told the council the salary for Chief of Police, who was also present at the meeting, was up for review according to his contract.

Chichester reported that the commissioners are very happy with the work Chief of Police Kurt Jack has performed thus far. He requested a (Continued on Page 2)

RSD, Craigville residents discuss project irritations

By DAVE SCHULTZ
It's becoming an understatement to say that the board of the Wells County Regional Sewer District is not pleased with the progress being made on the installation of a sanitary sewer collection network in Craigville.

A meeting will be held as soon as possible with the owner of VTF Excavation LLC. The RSD will be represented by Bruce Stinson, the RSD board's president; Ryan LeFeld of Choice One Engineering, the engineer of the project; and Lewis Brown, the RSD's superintendent.

If necessary, the group will travel to Celina, Ohio, where VTF is headquartered.

It was not made immediately clear what kind of a deadline the company is facing, but it's apparently coming up quickly. No one at Monday night's monthly meeting of the RSD's board was particularly pleased with the progress — or, more particularly, the lack of progress — in Craigville.

Brandon Wright, who owns property in Craigville, addressed the board at the beginning of Monday night's meeting. He's not happy because he has to pay full price for monthly sewer service, due to the payment deadline put in place by the State Revolving Fund, part of the Indiana Finance Authority. That is the case even though he is not being provided the sanitary sewer service he and other Craigville-area residents are supposed to be receiving.

He let the board know that a formal complaint has been filed with the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission. He also noted that he's contacted a Fort Wayne TV station.

The board understands the frustration expressed by Wright and others in the community, but the board (Continued on Page 2)

U.S. marks 22 years since 9/11 with tributes, tears

By JENNIFER PELTZ and KAREN MATTHEWS Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans looked back Monday on 9/11 with moments of silence, tearful words and appeals to teach younger generations about the terror attacks 22

"For those of us who lost people on that day, that day still happening. Everybody else moves on. And you find a way to go forward, but that day is always happening for you," Edward Edelman said as he arrived at New York's World Trade Center to honor his slain brother-in-law, Daniel

President Joe Biden, speaking at a military base in Anchorage, Alaska, urged Americans to rally around protecting democracy. His visit, en route to Washington from a trip to India and Vietnam, is a reminder that the impact of 9/11 was felt in every corner of the nation, however remote.

"We know that on this day, every American's heart was wounded," Biden said. "Yet every big city, small town, suburb, rural town, tribal community — American hands went up, ready to help where they could."

Nearly 3,000 people were killed when hijacked planes crashed into the trade center, the Pentagon and a Pennsylvania field, in an attack that reshaped American foreign policy and domestic fears.

On that day, "we were one country, one nation, one people, just like it should be," Eddie Ferguson, the fire-rescue chief in Virginia's Goochland County, said by phone before the anniversary.

The predominantly rural county of 25,000 people has a Sept. 11 memorial and holds two anniversary commemorations, one focused on first responders and another honoring all the victims.

U.S. sets $1B record for weather disasters

By SETH BORENSTEIN

AP Science Writer

The deadly firestorm in Hawaii and Hurricane Idalia's watery storm surge helped push the United States to a record for the number of weather disasters that cost $1 billion or more. And there's still four months to go on what's looking more like a calendar of calamities.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration announced Monday that there have been 23 weather extreme events in America that cost at least $1 billion this year through August, eclipsing the yearlong record total of 22 set in 2020. So far this year's disasters have cost more than $57.6 billion and claimed at least

And NOAA's count doesn't yet include Tropical Storm Hilary's damages in hitting California and a deep drought that has struck the South and Midwest because those costs are still to be totaled, said Adam Smith, the NOAA applied climatologist and economist who tracks the billion-dollar

"We're seeing the fingerprints of climate change all over our nation,' Smith said in an interview Monday. "I would not expect things to slow down anytime soon.

NOAA has been tracking billiondollar weather disasters in the United States since 1980 and adjusts damage costs for inflation. What's happening reflects a rise in the number of disasters and more areas being built in riskprone locations. Smith said.

"Exposure plus vulnerability plus climate change is supercharging more of these into billion-dollar disasters," Smith said.

NOAA added eight new billiondollar disasters to the list since its last update a month ago. In addition to Idalia and the Hawaiian firestorm that killed at least 115 people, NOAA newly listed an Aug. 11 Minnesota hailstorm; severe storms in the Northeast in early August; severe storms in Nebraska, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin in late July; mid-July hail and severe storms in Michigan,

McCarthy juggles shutdown, Biden impeachment inquiry

By LISA MASCARO AP Congressional Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) House Speaker Kevin McCarthy is a man who stays in motion – enthusiastically greeting tourists at the Capitol, dashing overseas to the G7 summit of industrial world leaders, and raising funds back home to elect fellow Republicans to the House majority.

But beneath the whirlwind of activity is a stubborn standstill, an imbalance of power between the far-right Republicans who hoisted McCarthy to the speaker's role yet threaten his own ability to lead the

It's a political standoff that will be tested anew as the House returns this week from a long summer recess and McCarthy faces a collision course of difficult challenges seeking to avoid a government shutdown, support Ukraine in the war and launch an impeachment inquiry into President Joe Biden.

They've got some really heavy lifting ahead," said the No. 2 Republican in the Senate, John Thune, of South Dakota.

McCarthy, of California, is going to "have his hands full trying to figure out how to navigate and execute," he said.

Congress has been here before, as has McCarthy in his nearly two decades in office, but the stakes are ever higher, with Republicans powered by an increasingly hardright faction that is refusing to allow business as usual in Washington.

With former President Donald Trump's backing, McCarthy's right flank pushed him into the speaker's office at the start of the year only after he agreed to a long list of conservative demands including the ability to call a quick vote to "vacate the chair" and remove him from office.

That threat of an abrupt ouster hovers over McCarthy's every move, especially now.

'We've got a lot of work to do," McCarthy told reporters late Monday at the Capitol, brushing off calls for his removal.

other dignitaries at the ceremony on the National Sept. 11 Memorial plaza. Instead of remarks from political figures, the event features victims reading the names of the dead and delivering brief personal messages.

Some included patriotic declarations about American values and thanked first responders and the military. One lauded the Navy SEALs who killed al-Qaida leader and 9/11 plotter Osama bin Laden in Pakistan in 2011. Another appealed for peace and justice. One acknowledged the many lives lost in the post-9/11 "War on Terror." And many shared reflections on missing loved ones.

'Though we never met, I am honored to carry your name and legacy with me," said Manuel João DaMota Jr., who was born after his father and namesake died.

To Gabrielle Gabrielli, reading names "is the biggest honor of my life." She lost her uncle and godfather, Richard Gabrielle.

"We have to keep the memory of everybody who died alive. This is their legacy," Gabrielli said, heading into the ceremony.

Biden, a Democrat, became the first president to commemorate Sept. 11 in the western U.S. He and his predecessors have gone to one or another of the attack sites in most years, though Republican George W. Bush and Democrat Barack Obama each marked the anniversary on the White House lawn at times, and Obama also visited Fort Meade in Maryland.

Warning of a rise in extremism and political violence, Biden told service members and their families that "every generation has to fight" to preserve U.S. democracy.

"That's why the terrorists targeted us in the first place - our freedom, our openness, our institutions. They failed. But we must remain vigilant," he said.

First lady Jill Biden laid a wreath at the 9/11 memorial at the Pentagon, where a giant American flag hung over the side of the building. Earlier, bells tolled, and musicians played taps at 9:37 a.m., the time when one of the hijacked jets hit the military headquar-

"As the years go by, it may feel that the world is moving on or even forgetting what happened here on Sept. 11, 2001," but the Defense Department will always remember, Secretary Lloyd Austin said. He deployed to Iraq in the war that followed the attack.

Harris' husband, Doug Emhoff, laid a wreath at the Flight 93 National Memorial near Shanksville, Pennsylvania, where another plane crashed after passengers tried to storm the cockpit. Earlier Monday at the memorial, a rabbi from Pittsburgh's Tree of Life synagogue, where a gunman killed 11 worshippers in 2018, called for ensuring that younger people know about 9/11.

Marion Williams, 95

Marion MacLane Williams, 95, of Bluffton passed away on Friday, July 28, 2023, at River Terrace Estates in Bluffton.

Marion was born on Dec. 13, 1927, in Lynn, Mass. She received her B.A. in elementary education from the University of New Hampshire in Durham, N.H., and her M.A. in childhood education from St. Francis College in Fort Wayne. She worked as an elementary school teacher for 30 years in Clinton, N.Y., and in the Fort Wayne school system. She also worked as a homemaker, raising four children with her husband, Frederick Williams.

Marion was active in her community - she was known for her piano-playing skill and was the Church Organist at Ossian Presbyterian Church for 30 years. She belonged to Sigma Alpha Iota, a music sorority, and was a member of the Organist Guild, University Women, Sargasso Book Club, Red Hatters and various bridge clubs. Marion and her husband Fred were long time supporters of the Fort Wayne Philharmonic and WBNI, the local PBS station. Marion and her husband were avid golfers at Parlor

City Country Club. Marion was known to have a zest for living. This was evidenced through her musical contributions and her ever-present reading interest.

She is survived by her children, Stan (Carol) Williams of St. Augustine, Fla., Anson (Sabine James) Williams of Chester, Virg., Patricia (John) Sheehan of Park Ridge, Ill., and Ralph (Alice) Williams of Newcastle, Calif.; four grandchildren, Zane Williams of St. Augustine, Fla., and Laura Sheehan (Philip) Suprise, Andrew Sheehan, and Tim Sheehan of Chicago; and one great-granddaughter, Zoe Suprise (6 mos) of Chicago.

She was preceded in death by her husband of 56 years, Frederick Allen Williams; parents, Stanley Robinson MacLane and Laura Newell MacLane of Alstead, N.H.; and her brother, Donald MacLane, of Geneseo, N.Y.

A Memorial Service will be held at 2 p.m. on Sunday, Sept. 17, 2023, at Ossian Presbyterian Church, 123 South Jefferson Street in Ossian, with an informal reception to follow. Memorial Contributions may be made to Wells County Public Library in Ossian.

YOU'RE GOOD AT USING EVERY LAST RAY OF SUN BEFORE IT'S TOO DARK TO WORK OUTSIDE.

A day in a rural Rwandan community with five artisans

Aristotle coined the phrase, "The soul never thinks without an image.'

I think of those seven words often, including when I walk into our living room and look at the wall. Hanging on our wall are three hand-made colorful baskets.

Those three teal and tan baskets take me back to June when my wife and I spent a day in a rural village in east Africa learning about everyday Rwandan life from five women who work as artisans.

Peeper

The three baskets are made from dyed natural sisal fibers and woven over a core of forest grasses. Sisal fiber comes from an agave and is the perfect fiber to make such baskets due to how strong and durable it is,

It took us a couple of minutes to pick out the baskets in a store and about five minutes to hang them on our wall. It took the talented artisan who made them, however, two to three days to weave each one by hand.

It was one of a myriad of "things" we learned and were amazed by as Jen and I spent "A Day in the Life of an Artisan" experience with the organization Azizi

Jen had known about the organization for quite some time, as it started in partnership with Food for the Hungry when she was studying abroad in Rwanda in college more than a decade ago.

The products they sell are called fair trade, which means the artisans receive the funds for the products

By spending the day with a group of artisans (and a translator), we were able to get a glimpse into their work and their everyday lives.

We left the capital city of Kigali early in the morning to drive almost two hours outside of the city to a rural community where we met five women who live there. The women are part of a group called "Helping Our Homes," and they focus on using their skills and talents as artisans to create products they sell to earn extra income for their families.

Moments after we arrived and greeted our new friends with hugs and handshakes, they gave us a new outfit to wear made of traditional Rwandan fabrics.

Clad in our new clothes, our first task of the day was to go on a short hike to a near-by field and gather the ingredients we would need to make lunch. We saw a myriad of cassava plants, which are similar to yuca. Our first job was to dig up the plant's root, peel the cassava plant and then clean it so that it could be cooked.

Next, we helped prepare a field for planting. Later, we cut some grass from another field to feed to the neighbor's cow.

From there, we hiked down a hill to a well that had a spigot. This spot is where the community members walk every day with buckets to gather water to carry back to their homes to boil, as it is not safe to drink from the tap.

We spent a couple of hours working alongside our new friends and getting to know them through the help of our translator as we shared stories about our families

By 1 p.m., we were all ready for lunch as we sat down in Beatriz's living room to enjoy a big plate of beans, cassava, sweet potato and avocado.

After lunch, we learned that the five women we were visiting specialize in making earrings for Azizi Life. This news made Jen's day, as she loves the earrings that Azizi Life sells and wears them often.

What happened next absolutely amazed me as I observed how they make these earrings.

We walked to a plant where one of the women cut off a long leaf that to my untrained eyes appeared to be aloe vera. (It wasn't.)

Next, she cut off the ends and made a few more cuts on the long leaf. Suddenly, she was removing individual pure white fibers from the large leaf that were the same texture as dental floss yet much stronger that what we use to clean our teeth.

We learned that the women dye the fibers using water and a powdered color so that the earrings they create are colorful.

Jen caught on quickly as the women taught us to make earrings; let's just say that I won't be going into the earring business anytime soon. I'd probably still be sitting there today trying to make my first pair if one of our new friends had not jumped in to show me (e.g. do

Jen and I were both amazed at how fast our new friends could weave the earrings that they gave Jen to bring home. By the end of the day, it was one of many aspects of their lives that amazed us.

We had spent the first two days of our time in Rwanda in the city. Our day trip to the rural village, however, gave us a small glimpse into what life is like for many people who live in the country's small towns and rural villages and the challenges they face every

I'm reminded of that perspective every morning and every evening as I look at the baskets hanging on our wall and think about the day we spent in a rural east African community.

The soul never thinks without an image.

We need a truce in our wars over religion. Here's a glimmer of hope.

You could fill many cookbooks with the recipes being offered to ease division in American public life. Many are rooted in wishful thinking. But when it comes to religion - one of the most divisive topics in U.S. politics - there are glimmers of hope for a better conversation.

Over the past several months, an old truth has become new again: Houses of worship and other religious institutions play an essential role in promoting social connectedness, mutual aid and community

What has brought this realization to life is widespread concern over the rise of loneliness and decline of forces that pull communities together. With religious disaffiliation soaring, especially among younger Americans, there is reason to worry that secular alternatives to religious civil society are not growing fast enough to fill the void. Even if secular social spaces proliferate, a society suffering from disconnection can ill afford to lose any of its community-building

And there can be no denying that faith-based groups do that sort of work. As Daniel A. Cox, a senior fellow at the American Enterprise Institute (and former student of mine at Georgetown University), reported in a 2021 paper: "Americans who are members of a place of worship are much more likely than those who are not to volunteer in the community at least a few times a year (47 percent vs. 23 percent), talk to someone in their community they do not know well (64 percent vs. 54 percent), and attend a community meeting or local event (60 percent vs. 41 percent)." They are also "more likely than others to feel connected to their neighborhood and the people who live there (58 percent vs. 46 percent)."

But an appreciation of religion must be joined with an acceptance of its paradoxes: It can be both unifying and divisive, promote both dissent and conformity, bring forth both self-criticism and tribal selfsatisfaction. What's required to move forward is for religious people to face up to the downsides of faith's public role and for religion's critics to cultivate gratitude for how it enriches our common life.

On the negative side: The public voices of White Christianity especially have moved well to the right, in too many cases toward an embrace of a deeply intolerant ethno-nationalism. This has only accelerated the flight from religion, especially in more progressive, younger generations.

As a liberal Catholic, I welcomed Pope Francis's recent warning against "a very strong reactionary attitude" among parts of the American Catholic leadership and a "climate of closure" in which "ideology replaces faith."

Yes, liberals need to worry about ideology replacing faith, too. But Francis is right that if religion becomes a synonym for reaction, many will fall by the wayside. As the traditions of the Black church have reminded us again and again, the prophetic power of religion must place love and justice at its core, or else it becomes, in the words of Saint Paul, "a noisy gong or a clanging But critics of conservative religion need

Dionne to remember that community-mindedness is not just a habit of progressives. As Cox's data shows, it is a virtue that crosses lines of tradition and ideology Here's what's heartening about the new turn in the conversation: Many secular people and progressives are lifting up religion's socially constructive role. My Post colleague Perry Bacon Jr., who left the church, wrote powerfully last month about a "church-size hole in American life," noting that even attractive secular alternatives did not provide "singing, sermons and solidarity all at once." Two of the leading public voices highlighting the costs of rising loneliness, Sen. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.) and Surgeon General Vivek H. Murthy, have similarly cited the role of churches in combating isolation and building personal and neighborly bonds. In his report "Our Epidemic of Loneliness and Isolation," Murthy was direct: "Religious or faith-based groups can be a source for regular social contact, serve as a community of support, provide meaning and purpose, create a sense of belonging around shared values and beliefs, and are associated with reduced risk-taking behaviors."

It's true that very few people decide to believe in God (or not) for reasons of social utility, and humans have argued for centuries over whether religious faith is good or bad for the world. Even those who share my tilt toward the positive side in this debate must acknowledge that religion has been mobilized for evil purposes and that religious leaders (like all human beings) have shown ample capacity for sin and corruption - another reason so many have fled to the ranks of the disaffiliated.

Nonetheless, critics of religion who rightly preach the value of open-mindedness should apply that virtue in their approach to people of faith and the institutions they build. Doing so won't work miracles. But it might help us recognize that the path to truth and to a less fractious society often takes unexpected turns.

No, we aren't Rome

An op-Ed in The New York Times warns, as the headline puts it, that "America is an empire in decline," and finds a precedent in imperial Rome.

The piece, written by the co-author of a new book, "Why Empires Fall: Rome, America, and the Future of the West," shows that the cottage industry in comparisons between the United States and Rome is as robust as ever. It is an irresistible temptation to superimpose the history of Rome and especially its decline and fall — an enduring subject of fascination — on top of our own experience and future.

Both conservatives and progressives are prone to their own versions of this narrative, tending to emphasize either moral decline or imperial over-stretch respectively.

But the most important thing to know about us and our supposed imperial forbear is that we aren't Rome and aren't experiencing any of the most direct, spectacular causes of its fall.

It's become fashionable among some scholars to argue that there was no fall. There were no barbarian invasions. There was no material decline. Nothing to see here — simply evolutionary change.

It is true that Rome's fall — a long, messy process — didn't unfold with the pleasing cinematic simplicity that the popular imagination might ian population transfers has been exaggerated and the Eastern half of the empire lived on for another 1,000 years. Still, the Western Roman believe; the extent of the barbar-

Empire unquestionably fell, with disastrous consequences for a long time. It's just that dragging us into it is wildly off base. Rome tore itself apart with constant assassinations, usurpa-

LOWIV tions, and civil wars. It weakened itself economically and militarily, while confronting challenges from armed bands on its borders that it became incapable of handling as it steadily lost its territory

> At the same time, it had to grapple with the Persian Empire to the East.

and sources of financial support to barbarian groups.

Is this happening to the United States? Well, an armed contingent of Quebecers isn't (like the Visigoths) wandering throughout the United States, fighting periodic battles with the U.S. military and seeking subsidies from the U.S. Senate before besieging — and eventually sacking Washington, D.C.

Migrants to the United States don't settle en masse in national groupings led by military leaders seeking power and preferment. They disperse throughout the country and take illegal jobs as busboys and the like.

U.S. presidents have to worry about declining poll numbers, a recalcitrant congressional opposition, and reelection campaigns.

They don't, like Roman emperors, need to think all the time about potential assassinations and armed usurpers. They don't need to worry that if they assign a general to take over, say, CENTCOM, he will use the position to muster the troops and resources to challenge for power himself. They don't need to consider the positioning of military forces with an eye to checking internal enemies. Jan. 6 was disgraceful day but a blip hardly worth mentioning relative to the perpetual, large-scale internal disorder in imperial Rome.

The 1st Infantry Division isn't marching on Washington, D.C., from Fort Riley, Kansas, and fighting a pitched battle with the 4th Marine Division devastating to the countryside somewhere in Ohio.

None of this is to deny that the United States and the West may have entered a period of what will ultimately prove to be terminal decline or that rivals, most notably China, are on the rise. It is to say that unless our representative democracy degenerates into an unelected dictatorship with no reliable means of succession and Canada and Mexico begin to eat away at our territory, the story of our decline is not going to track closely with that of Rome, a vastly different polity, at a different time.

By all means, study the history of Rome for its own sake and for the insights it affords into human nature and the roots of the Western world. But the moral of the story needn't be about 21st-century America.

New faces at First Presbyterian

By BARBARA BARBIERI

Members of Bluffton's First Presbyterian Church welcomed two new faces to their midst in August as they not only welcomed their new Pastor Rev. Terry Epling but also Sandra Garcia, a Candidate for Ordained Ministry, under the care of the Whitewater Valley Presbytery.

Pastor Epling graduated from Louisville seminary in 1995 and has served in Wisconsin, Missouri and Indiana-most recently at Trinity Presbyterian Church in Fort Wayne. He is married to the Rev. Dr. Anne Epling, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in downtown

Fort Wayne. The Eplings reside in Fort Wayne and have four children. Their oldest is Henry who graduated from the College of Wooster and works in Fort Wayne as an environmental specialist; Tommy graduated from the University of Denver and is a special education teacher in the Denver Public Schools; Julia is a junior at Miami University in Ohio studying English Education and their youngest Charlotte is a sophomore at Homestead High School, playing clarinet in the band and excels at piano and Spanish.

In accepting the call to the church here Pastor Epling explains that he has found that "the church has a deep history of community involvement, Christian spiritual formation and engaging worship that connected with his own commitments to connecting body, mind and spirit in service to God's mission."

"The congregation's newly constructed labyrinth is a physical expression of its desire to meet people where they are to help them become more centered in their walk of faith," Epling continued.

Over the next year Pastor Epling will be a mentor for Pastor Garcia, who also is a Fort Wayne resident along with her husband Martin

As she prepares for her ordination, she is required to engage in supervised ministry within a congregation. Here she will be employed as an Assistant Pastor spending 12 to 15 hours a week and most Sundays on site. She also will continue taking classes in Indianapolis at Christian Theological Seminary.

Sandra and her husband Martin Garcia, who also is a pastor at Fort Wayne's Amistad Presbyterian Church, conduct a radio show once a week on Saturdays from 10 a.m. until noon with information relevant to the Latino community. To check it out go to amistadfw.

Be in special prayer for all who are having health problems.

As reported to me those fighting cancer are: Frank Ratcliffe, Randy Dammeyer, and Sandra Flum.

Those recovering are: Dan Platt from a stroke, Alyssa Sheley from gall bladder surgery, and Abi Fromm from her heart transplant.

As I write this article I need to send a plea out to anyone who has the time and will put out the effort to mow the ballpark next year. For several years now we have been mowed by volunteers and just in the past few years Randy Frick has been doing the mowing. Now Randy tells me he is returning to driving truck and will not be able to fit the bill for next year. Please call me if you are interested even if it is for one week out of the month. The team that contracts the actual diamond takes care of the mowing inside the fence.

Did you know that Union Center's Independents won the Wells County Independent Basketball League Championship in 1945-46? Each player's year of graduation from Union Center is in parenthesis. They were: John Hoopingarner (34), Woodrow Pence (36), Max Wilson (45), Denver Slater (38) with manager Curly Burnau (35), Dewey Hobbs from Lafayette Central, George Schwartz (39), Dale Hoopingarner (44) and 'Bud' Jacobs (38). Knights win a Wells County rivalry match over Tigers in tennis

By RYAN WALKER

The battle between the two Wells County boys' tennis teams went down Monday afternoon, and the Norwell Knights were on top by the end of the night with a 4-1 victory over Bluffton.

A win is a win, but none sweeter than beating a crosstown rival for Norwell head coach Noah Tobias, who played for the same Knights team back in his career and understands the magnitude of the match.

"We definitely feel that pressure a little bit just because we do want to be considered the best team in Wells County, even though there's only two of us. It's still kind of a thing you hold," Tobias said after the match. "We're a very close community with Bluffton, so, yeah, it obviously feels a lot better whenever you beat Bluffton."

The Knights' victory was over within the first three matches, with Grant Mishler and Bodie Zimmer winning at No. 1 and No. 2 singles, while Jaden Payne and Jake Hoover won their match at No. 1 doubles.

On a young Tigers team that graduated virtually their entire roster, the ones that left the court early in two sets were all juniors. The junior class is the eldest, as there are no seniors on the team.

Bluffton head coach Robert Vanderkolk has seen his older group at its best this year, but it wasn't there on Tuesday.

"I need more out of my juniors," Vanderkolk said. "There's no senior leadership here. My juniors need to step up and take care of it. I've got five juniors on varsity. If they're not going to take care of it, it's impossible to win a match. I love 'em. They give me everything they got more often than not, but for whatever reason tonight, they didn't compete as well as they're capable of competing."

The last two matches had Bluffton winning in both at one point. Freshman Jacob Ribich ended up winning a close contest over Gavin Reynolds at No. 3 singles.

On the court right next to Ribich was junior Dane Schlagenhauf and freshman Coy Lantz at No. 2 doubles, who won the first set early, 7-5.

The Norwell No. 2 doubles team of Eddie Archbold and Ayden Quintanilla wouldn't go down without a fight, though, winning the next set 6-3 and ultimately coming back with a 7-5 victory in the third set.

Tobias was impressed with his team's ability to come back after losing the first game or set. Payne and Hoover lost the first game to Bluffton's Kade Abbett and Ben Maggard, along with the No. 2 doubles team, but were able to come back and win.

"Even though we're losing, we're still doing a good job at finding a way how to win," Tobias said. "Sometimes, we're playing bad because we're not perfect, obviously, but you just got to find a way, any way, and they did that, and I'm super proud of them."

Vanderkolk also complimented Archbold and Quintanilla on their efforts.

"It's just, 'OK, who wants it more at five all?' And Eddie and Ayden wanted it more, so hats off to them for finishing that match, especially coming into it down a set," Vanderkolk said.

This year, the boys' tennis sectional dropped Huntington North, which has had its way with bringing home hardware in recent history. The Vikings were the only team in the way of Norwell's first sectional title since 2016.

Bluffton still has yet to see any of the schools in the sectional field during the regular season, with South Adams, Adams Central, and Bellmont on the schedule. The Tigers will get a look at the Starfires this Thursday, while the Jets and Braves await next week.

Pending Vanderkolk's evaluation of the rest of the field, he believes there's a good chance his Tigers will match up with the Knights again, no matter where the draw lands them.

Vanderkolk also wants to see some changes in his lineup to string together by the season's end and give his best shot at winning. Like Tobias, his competitive spirit has him chomping at the bit to get back on the winners' side in the county.

"Yeah, I want to play Norwell," Vanderkolk said. "There's nothing better than beating Norwell to win a sectional championship. If my guys don't want to do that, we'll just go home and get ready for the winter sports season."

Norwell's next match will be at New Haven at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 12.

Bluffton's next match will be at Bishop Luers at 5 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 13.

N.Y. Yankees at Boston, 7:10 p.m. Wisconsin 8, Cedar Rapids 5 Indiana ends quarterback competition by naming Tayven Jackson the starter

By MICHAEL MAROT

AP Sports Writer Indiana's quarterback competition ended Monday with coach Tom Allen naming Tayven Jackson the Hoosiers'

Jackson had been competing with Brendan Sorsby throughout the offseason and over the first two games this season for the job. Both are secondyear players who threw only a handful of passes as true freshmen, and both made their first career starts this season.

Sorsby got the first shot in a seasonopening 23-3 loss to then No. 3 Ohio State. Jackson started last weekend's 41-7 victory over Indiana State. While neither has thrown a touchdown pass yet, Jackson ran for one score in Week 2 and appeared to energize the Hoosiers offense in both games.

Allen saw it similarly heading into Saturday's showdown with unbeaten Louisville (2-0) at Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis.

"We've got two quarterbacks I believe can both successfully lead our program and do great things on game day," Allen said. "I felt like we needed to get full game evaluation because it was so close and to be able to see, 'OK, who moves the ball down the field and scores points?' That's really what it comes down to at the end of the day, and there's a field presence you have during games.'

Jackson went 18 of 21 with 236 yards against the Sycamores, an FCS program that has lost all seven meetings, against the state's bigger-name program while Sorsby was 9 of 16 with 108 yards.

Against Ohio State, Sorsby was 8 of 16 with 58 yards while Jackson went 1 of 6 for 24 yards and led Indiana to its only score — a banked 42-yard field goal in the second quarter.

Sorsby signed with Indiana as a highly touted recruit out of Texas and made one relief appearance with the Hoosiers last season.

Jackson, the brother of Indiana basketball All-American Trayce Jackson-Davis, chose to attend Tennessee after leading Center Grove High School to two straight undefeated seasons and consecutive Indiana state championships. He then opted to transfer back to his home-state school.

"I'll say it was close without question, but at the same time, this is where we are," Allen said. "That's really what it comes down to, being able to score points, and I think both guys can do it at a high level. I really do. I think you saw that from both of them."

If recent history is any indication, the Hoosiers (1-1, 0-1 Big Ten) might need both this season. Indiana started six quarterbacks and used seven overall during the previous two seasons and hasn't had a quarterback open and close the season as the starter since Peyton Ramsey in 2018.

It's also possible a third candidate could join the mix next month — if Dexter Williams II started Indiana's final two games last season, his third in the program, before dislocating his right knee in the season finale against Purdue. He needed offseason surgery to repair "significant structural damage" and was initially expected to miss all of 2023. But in June, Allen told reporters Williams' recovery was ahead of schedule and he could be available around midseason.

Williams also missed the entire 2021 season with a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee.

For now, though, Jackson is QB1.

"I know they both want to be the guy, I get that," Allen said. "You're competitive. You want to be in this position. But Tayven knows he's got to perform, and Brendan knows he's got to be ready. That's the reality of competition and performing at an elite level."

Browns lose starting tackle Jack Conklin for the season after knee in opener vs Bengals

By TOM WITHERS AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND (AP) — Jack Conklin kept Deshaun Watson from harm.

He couldn't protect himself. Cleveland's starting right tackle sustained a "major" left knee injury in the first half of Sunday's win over Cincinnati and will miss the remainder of the season, a major personal blow and significant one for the Browns.

Conklin, who returned last season from a severe injury to his right knee, tore two ligaments when he was inadvertently rolled up on by Bengals end Trey Hendrickson at the end of a pass play in the first half of the Browns' 24-3 season-opening win.

Conklin was finishing off his block when Hendrickson hit him from the side after being pushed down by Browns left tackle Jedrick Wills. Jr. Conklin was carted off the field and tests Monday confirmed the diagnosis.

"He's a huge part of this team, and when he gets this surgery and when he's ready, he's going to be back in this building helping us because he's a big part of that offensive line room," coach Kevin Stefanski said on a Zoom call. "So disappointed for him."

A two-time All-Pro, Conklin worked hard and returned earlier than expected last season after rupturing his right patellar tendon in 2021. His comeback inspired teammates, who voted him their Ed Block Courage

The Browns signed the 29-year-old Conklin to a four-year, $60 million contract extension in December.

Stefanski is confident that Conklin, who played four seasons with Tennessee before coming to Cleveland as a free agent in 2020, will make another return.

'He's so conscientious, so mature," Stefanski said. "So he's disappointed and upset about it, but I have no doubt that he'll bounce back from this, just knowing the person."

After Conklin went out, rookie Dawand Jones came on and played well in his NFL debut.

'Some really good moments, some things that he's got to clean up," Stefanski said. "Honestly, any young player, when you get thrown into the mix early, there's going to be some time to catch up. And I thought he had some good moments, some things that we will work real hard to clean up.'

A fourth-round pick from Ohio State, the 6-foot-8, 375-pound Jones has steadily improved since minicamp and held his own against the Bengals.

If he stays in the starting lineup, he'll have his hands full next week as the Browns play at Pittsburgh and he could be matched up against Steelers All-Pro edge rusher T.J. Watt. The Browns have another option in third-year tackle James Hudson III, who has made seven career starts. Jones, though, keeps getting better and Stefanski was impressed with his "There are no redshirts in the NFL

so you never know when that opportunity is going to come," he said. "It happened in the first half of the first game and you have to be ready. He will continue to get better and then as it pertains to any matchup moving forward, it's the NFL, every week is going to be very difficult.

"Obviously, going into Pittsburgh is tough on every team that goes into that place. So we'll have a plan and we'll move forward."

Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse honored as September member of the month

The Wells County Chamber of Commerce is thrilled to announce Lydia Yaste, the proud owner of Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse, as the distinguished September Chamber Member of the Month. Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse, located at 229 West Market Street in Bluffton, has captured the hearts of locals and visitors alike with its delightful offerings and welcoming ambiance.

Lydia Yaste's entrepreneurial journey began with a dream to establish her own business, a vision she had nurtured over time. Her father's entrepreneurial spirit had been a guiding influence, inspiring her with the belief that hard work and dedication could make her dream a reality.

Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse first opened its doors on Main Street, where it thrived for three years. In 2020, a remarkable opportunity presented itself, leading to the purchase and renovation of a building on Market Street. The move to the new location in August offered a substantial increase in space, enabling expanded services and enhancing the overall customer experience.

The Market Street location has brought remarkable growth opportunities, allowing the café to diversify its offerings and provide a more spacious environment. The increased demand, especially during the spring and summer months, has enabled expanded outdoor seating options.

Over the past three years, Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse has gained momentum and extended its services to include catering and business lunches, enriching the local community's culinary experiences. This year, the café introduced its mobile Avis Coffee Cart, available for events such as weddings and corporate gatherings, with the first official event scheduled for early October.

Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse prides itself on offering high-quality craft coffee, a full espresso bar, and a variety of options for non-coffee drinkers, including teas and smoothies. The bakery delights patrons with freshly baked goods, including scones, muffins, granola bars, and popular items like raspberry bars. Additionally, the café serves soups, salads, breakfast, and brunch options, ensuring there's something for everyone to Running this business brings immense joy to Lydia Yaste, who finds fulfillment in providing a welcoming space where people can connect over a cup of coffee or a pastry. She takes pride in the café's role as a community hub, where conversations and meaningful interactions take place against the backdrop of warm sunshine streaming through the windows.

Yaste expressed her deep appreciation for her dedicated staff, describing them as phenomenal and the driving force behind the café's success. She emphasized the importance of building relationships with customers and delivering exceptional customer service, ensuring that patrons not only enjoy a great cup of coffee but also feel a genuine connection to the establishment.

Hugh's Bakery & Coffeehouse operates from Monday through Friday, opening its doors from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Saturdays from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Trump lawyers seek recusal of judge in DC presiding over federal election subversion case

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for Donald Trump on Monday asked the federal judge presiding over his election subversion case in Washington to recuse herself, saying her past public statements about the former president and his connection to the Jan. 6, 2021, riot at the U.S. Capitol call into question whether she can be fair.

The recusal motion from Trump's lawyers takes aim at U.S. District Judge Tanya Chutkan, a former assistant public defender who was nominated to the bench by President Barack Obama and has stood out as one of the toughest punishers of Jan. 6 defendants. The request is a long shot given the high threshold for recusal and because the decision on whether to recuse belongs to Chutkan, who is unlikely to see cause to step aside from the case.

Even so, the request that she give up the high-stakes trial marks the latest flashpoint in already delicate relations between the defense team and the judge, who has repeatedly cautioned against inflammatory public comments from Trump but has nonetheless been lambasted on social media by him. Special counsel Jack Smith's team signaled its own concern about his comments, writing last week that Trump's daily statements he has derided her as "highly partisan" - could taint a potential jury pool.

Chutkan ordered Smith's team to file any opposition to Trump's recusal bid by Thursday.

Chutkan last month scheduled the trial for March 4, 2024, over the vigorous objections of defense lawyers who said that would not give them enough time to prepare. The case in Washington, charging Trump in a four-count indictment with plotting to overturn the results of the 2020 election, is one of four criminal cases confronting the former president as he seeks reelection to the White House.

In asking Chutkan to step aside, the Trump legal team is relying on a familiar playbook. He tried unsuccessfully to get the judge removed from the hush-money case against him in New York state court, with his lawyers claiming that New York Judge Juan Manuel Merchan is biased because he's given cash to Democrats and his daughter is a party consultant.

But the judge last month rejected Trump's demand that he step aside, saying he is certain of his "ability to be fair and impartial.'

Federal judges are supposed to step aside in cases where their "impartiality might reasonably be questioned." Other bases for recusal include a personal bias against one of the parties. Trump's lawyers say Chutkan's comments in cases against Jan. 6 rioters show she has "already formed an opinion about President Trump's guilt" and many of the allegations that underpin the indictment against him.

"Although Judge Chutkan may genuinely intend to give President Trump a fair trial — and may believe that she can do so - her public statements unavoidably taint these proceedings, regardless of outcome," the defense team wrote. "The public will reasonably and understandably question whether Judge Chutkan arrived at all of her decisions in this matter impartially, or in fulfillment of her prior negative statements regarding President Trump."

Chutkan has often handed down prison sentences in Jan. 6 cases that are harsher than Justice Department prosecutors recommended. The judge also previously ruled against Trump in a separate Jan. 6 case, refusing his request to block the release of documents to the U.S. House's Jan. 6 committee by asserting executive

Although Google products such as the Chrome web browser, Gmail, You-Tube and online maps all are hugely popular, none have become as indispensable — or as valuable — as the internet search engine invented by Page and a fellow Stanford University graduate student, Sergey Brin, during the late 1990s.

The trial is beginning just a couple weeks after the 25th anniversary of the first investment in the company — a $100,000 check written by Sun Microsystems cofounder Andy Bechtolsheim that enabled Page and Brin to set up shop in a Silicon Valley garage.

American researcher has been rescued from deep Turkish cave

Turkey (AP) - Rescuers pulled an American researcher out of a Turkish cave early Tuesday, more than a week after he became seriously ill more than 3,000 feet below its entrance, the Speleological Federation of Turkey said.

Teams from across Europe had rushed to Morca cave in southern Turkey's Taurus Mountains to aid Mark Dickey, a 40-yearold experienced caver who became seriously ill on Sept. 2 with stomach bleeding. He was on an expedition to map the cave, which is the country's third deepest.

Dickey was t oo frail to climb out himself, so rescuers carried him with the help of a stretcher, making frequent stops at temporary camps set up along the way.

"Mark Dickey is out of the Morca cave," said a statement by the speleological federation. It said that Dickey TASELI PLATEAU, was removed from the last exit of the cave at 12:37 a.m. local time Tuesday, or 9:37 p.m. GMT Monday.

"He is fine and is being tended to by emergency medical worker in the encampment above," the statement said.

Lying on a stretcher surrounded by reporters following his rescue, Dickey described the ordeal as a "crazy, crazy adventure."

"It is amazing to be above ground again," he said, thanking the Turkish government for saving his life with its rapid response. He also thanked the international caving community, Turkish cavers and Hungarian Cave Rescue.

The American was first treated inside the cave by a Hungarian doctor who went down the cave on Sept. 3. Doctors and rescuers then took turns caring for him. The cause of Dickey's illness was not clear.

On Tuesday, Dickey said that in the cave he had started to throw up large quantities of blood.

"My consciousness started to get harder to hold on to, and I reached the point where I thought 'I'm not going to live," he told reporters.

The biggest challenges for the rescuers getting him out of the cave were the steep vertical sections and navigating through mud and water at low temperatures in the horizontal sections. There was also the psychological toll of staying inside a dark, damp cave for extended periods of time.

Around 190 experts from Bulgaria, Croatia, Hungary, Italy, Poland and Turkey took part in the rescue, including doctors, paramedics and experienced cavers. Teams comprised of a doctor and three to four other rescuers took turns staying by his side at all times.

The rescue began on Saturday after doctors, who administered IV fluids and blood, determined that Dickey could make the arduous ascent.

Before the evacuation could begin, rescuers first had to widen some of the cave's narrow passages, install ropes to pull him up vertical shafts on a stretcher and set up temporary camps along the way.

Dickey, who is from Croton-on-Hudson, New York, is a well-known cave researcher and a cave rescuer himself who had participated in many international expeditions.

ple on the expedition were mapping the 4,186-foot deep Morca cave system for the Anatolian Speleology Group Association. Dickey became ill on Sept. 2, but it took until the next morning to notify people above ground.

Turkish authorities made a video message available that showed Dickey standing and moving around on Thursday. While alert and talking, he said he was not "healed on the inside" and needed a lot of help to get out of the cave.

After his rescue, the head of Turkey's Disaster and Emergency Management Presidency, Okay Memis, told a news conference that the health of Dickey was "very good."

The European Cave Rescue Association said Dickey would be transferred to a hospital following a medical assessment.

It said that many cave rescuers remained in the cave to remove rope and rescue equipment used during the operation.

The association expressed its "huge gratitude to the many cave rescuers from seven different countries who contributed to the success of this cave rescue operation."

Mean mother needs my help

Dear Annie: My mom probably her. She can't realhas narcissism and borderline personality disorders but has never been herself; she never diagnosed. She is extremely difficult to deal with, and everyone knows this. She believes she is super special, has very high standards and has been catered to by everyone. Her children have taken different paths in deal- myself is, why ing with her: One has rigid boundaries and rarely deals with issues that arise. I am forever trying to help my mom; I have suffered greatly but have also gotten help and developed some boundaries so that she bothers me less than she did previously.

Neither of us live near our mom, and no one else related to her lives nearby. She lives alone and has been OK for a long time. She does have friends, all of whom are older. Now Mom seems to have dementia and is also sick. She needs help but rejects it. She remains impossible to deal with and impossible to please; her doctor just dismissed her for her abusive ways.

She has rejected anxiety or depression medication and all forms of therapy. She demands to be in control and seems to be competent. I feel an obligation to get her help, but I can't handle her, and, for my own mental and physical health, can't let her control me or send me off the edge.

I'm going out to help her but am scared because I know her behavior, and attitude, are terrible. It seems like one remaining option is to go to court to get control and do what's best for

by Annie Lane

Dear Problem: While the Disney fantasy of a fairy godmother would be ideal, most moms will never live up to those unrealistic expectations. It does sound like you were dealt a particularly challenging hand with a mom like yours. The good news is that you are an adult now who survived this type of mother, and as an adult, you have a choice on how you want to have your relationship be with her. Set clear boundaries, and call her on it if she steps over them.

In the meanwhile, the best advice So now she has what appear to be I can give you for your upcoming visit is to say the serenity prayer each time your mom puts you down. "God, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, the courage to change the things I can, and the wisdom to know the difference.'

'How Can I Forgive My Cheating Partner?" is out now! My Answer

By Dr. Billy Graham

Q: My church has decided to give messages from popular books that the pastor says are based on the Bible, but speak more clearly to today's issues. He says the Bible is just a collection of books written by people. This bothers me greatly. Should pastors replace the Bible with books from the bestseller list? -B.L.

A: Many people look to books that are supposed to give answers to the great questions of life. Skeptics have attacked the Bible and retreated in confusion. Many have scoffed at its teaching, but are unable to produce an intellectually honest refutation. Others have denied its validity, but must surrender to its historical accu-

Statements are made by people every day, from many sources, and people are inclined to believe that they're true and pass the information on to others. Yet some of the same people will sow seeds of doubt about the validity of God's Word.

The writers of the Bible spoke in many ways to indicate that God gave them their information. If God didn't speak to them, they were the most blatant and consistent liars the world has ever known. If we cannot believe that God spoke to them in the Bible, then we cannot believe that the prophecies came true — and yet they did!

Purdue hog-cooling invention to be manufactured by IHT Group

By HOOSIER AG TODAY

A Canadian-based company is licensing technology developed and patented by animal science experts at Purdue University and producing it for hog production farms beginning early next

IHT Group, a division of Decisive Dividend Corp. based in Winnipeg, Manitoba, is bringing patented cooling pad technology for hogs to the North American market in spring 2024.

The patented cooling pads were developed to keep boars and sows cooler, improve their feed intake and milk output, and increase piglet wean weight.

The pads are 2-foot-by-4-foot aluminum tread plates on top of copper pipes that circulate water. Sensors in the pads determine if the hog is too hot and circulate new water to keep the pad cool. The technology was designed by researchers in Purdue University's Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering and Department of Animal Sciences.

Heat harms hogs

Record heat across North America impacts not just people but also animals, including farmers' livestock. Francisco Cabezon, research president at Pipestone Research, which specializes in swine health research and recommendations, said overheating can cause problems for hogs.

"Under heat stress conditions, lactating sows reduce their feed intake and milk output to attempt to reduce their metabolic heat production. In consequence, their piglet growth and subsequent reproductive performance is negatively affected," said Cabezon, who earned his PhD at Purdue University. "In boars, some negative impacts of heat stress are decreased sperm motility and concentration and an increase in sperm abnormalities."

Chris Grant, IHT president, said farmers benefit when their swine aren't affected by heat stress.

"Animal welfare and well-being improve when heat stress is reduced," Grant said. "Farmers will have a larger, healthier animal that can grow better and has a better chance of survivability at the next stage."

Tests prove benefits Allan Schinckel, a professor in Purdue's Department of Animal Sciences, and Robert M. Stwalley III, associate clinical professor in Purdue's Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering, designed the cooling pads.

"The Purdue-developed IHT active swine cooling pads will represent a paradigm shift in hog production, increasing both operational efficiency and animal welfare," Stwalley said. "We are refining the pads and their materials, currently testing stainless steel pipes versus copper pipes to continue optimizing their performance."

Schinckel said the initial research showed the cooling pads make sows more comfortable.

"We saw a decrease in their overall respiration rates, slightly lower internal temperatures and lower daily maximum temperatures. The sows also produced more heat, which corresponded to an increase in their feed intake and milk production; this improves animal welfare and well-being," Schinckel said. "Piglets who were on the cooling pads had a 26 percent increase in weaning weight and 7.2 percent increase in feed intake."

The initial research at Purdue also showed the cooling pads maintained boars' semen quality by reducing heat stress abnormalities. The pads kept the boars cool even at high environmental temperatures and high humidity. They also kept the boars' respiration rate low.

Peer-reviewed papers about the initial research have been published in journals including Applied Engineering in Agriculture, Applied Animal Science, Computers and Electronics in Agriculture, Journal of Animal Science, Livestock Science, The Professional Animal Scientist and the Journal of the American Society of Agricultural and Biological Engineers.

Schinckel will present a poster about the effects of cooling pads on sows prior to farrowing and mid and late lactation at the Allen D. Leman Swine Conference, which takes place Sept. 16-19 at Saint Paul River-Centre in Minnesota.

Initial research on the cooling pads' effects on boars, sows and gilts conducted at Purdue was funded by grants from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Institute of Food and Agriculture and the Agricultural Science and Extension for Economic Development, or AgSEED, program from Purdue's College of Agriculture. IHT Group supported beta tests at Pipestone Research in Minnesota, led by Cabezon, and at Purdue and two commercial facilities in the U.S. IHT Group funded a graduate student at Purdue during the beta test period. Data from those tests is being complied for summarization for analyses.

Manufacturing and sales

IHT evaluated pads for their commercial assessment under a Commercial Evaluation Agreement with the Purdue Innovates Office of Technology Commercialization. Based on the results of the evaluation, IHT and OTC negotiated an exclusive license for manufacturing and selling the pads.

"We will sell the pads across North America in spring 2024 as farmers prepare for the heat stress of the summer," Grant said. "That launch date will also allow us to compile and analyze final data from the boar stud tests, which will be available in October."

Purdue University receives $1M USDA grant

The university aims to boost efficiency at dairy farms

By STEVE KOPPES Purdue University

A team of Purdue University researchers has received a $1 million grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Institute of Food and Agriculture to improve feed efficiency and consistency on dairy farms by using automated video analytics systems. The grant is among $9.6 million in recent NIFA investments supporting 12 projects in animal innovation systems.

"Feed costs are the No. 1 cost for dairy farmers. In order to make improvements on feed efficiency, we have to provide feedback to farmers close to in real time," said Jacquelyn Boerman, associate professor of animal sciences. "If we can improve the consistency of that feed and we know what individual cows are eating, we're going to manage that feed better. That has economic implications for dairy farmers."

The dairy industry aims to become carbon neutral by 2050 via various approaches, including modifying the environment of the cow rumen and managing manure to reduce methane emissions. Boerman's team will focus on enhancing dairy cow efficiency by providing them with consistent feed and measuring how much they eat.

A cattle nutritionist, Boerman will assess feed composition for consistency, which improves their milk production. Amy Reibman, the Elmore Professor of Electrical and Computer Engineering, will handle the video recording logistics and data analytics.

Dennis Buckmaster, professor of agricultural and biological engineering, will integrate the data with software systems that can measure movement, temperature, water intake, rumination and milk-production data from cows. Linda Pfeiffer, associate professor of agricultural sciences education and communication, heads the project's social sciences team, which will work with stakeholders to better understand how they can integrate the video technology into their operations.

The researchers will carry out the initial testing phase primarily at the Purdue Dairy Unit. "We hope that it will have applications for commercial farms afterward," Boerman said. The project has letters of support from the Indiana Dairy Producers and from farm nutrition companies.

Jacquelyn Boerman, associate professor of animal sciences at Purdue University, and her husband are dairy farmers, as are her parents. "I want to improve the lives of dairy farmers and the cows that live on their farms," she said.

The collaboration began with an internal 2022 proposal that led to funding a project between faculty members in the College of Agriculture and the College of Engineering. The new project also extends the work of Matthew Rogers, who received a doctorate in agricultural and biological engineering from Purdue in 2022. Rogers used stereovision to measure the volume of granular agricultural materials.

If successful, the project will make it possible to measure feed intake on a per-animal basis in group settings. "To date, we have only measured output per animal and have inputs aggregated per group," said Buckmaster, who is also the Dean's Fellow for Digital Agriculture.

Buckmaster is excited to blend early career work on forages, feeding, total mixed ration (TMR) for dairy cows, and particle size with his more recent work in digital architectural data pipelines.

"The ability to know that each batch is uniformly blended without tremendously tedious and expensive sampling will also be of great value in TMR situations," he said. His role will include assisting with the TMR uniformity experiments and feed characterization.

"I expect there will be some analysis and modeling needed to go from raw bulk volume measurements to peranimal intake, too. That will involve density and moisture content aspects as well as appropriately dividing feed disappearance when cows are side by side," he said.

The project's video analytics component will be designed to enhance understanding of the visual data that farmers depend upon for decision-making.

"Farmers are trained to make a lot of decisions based on things that they see," said Reibman, who specializes in video analytics for animals. "I'm an engineer. I want to solve problems. We should be able to design a system that can augment their abilities.

"We would like the system to be effective in an operational farm, and operational farms sometimes have harsh visual environments: bad lighting, dust. I call it shmutz in the air that gets on your cameras."

Feed ranks as the highest cost in dairy farming. A team of Purdue University researchers will use video analytics systems to explore how to improve feed efficiency with a $1 million grant from the USDA National Institute of Food and Agriculture.

The team's guiding principles are to obtain the data they need with placement of cameras and other equipment that dairy farmers will not have to work around.

"This notion that 'it has to work the way it is' instead of 'can we change the environment so that it'll work' is fascinating to me," Reibman said.

Pfeiffer, who leads the project's social science team, specializes in upstream, dialogic and coproduction communication models. "That means we're engaged upstream in research as the technology is being designed," Pfeiffer said. "And coproduction means that we're taking feedback from stakeholders."

For this project, farmers, nutritionists, veterinarians and industry representatives will share feedback with the engineers and the scientists as they're designing these camera systems to improve feed efficiency.

"We're frequently seeing technologies that are being developed to improve life often introduce costs, risks and challenges to the end user that are not often anticipated," Pfeiffer said. And that can result in resistance to the technologies.

The social science team also includes professor Mark Tucker and PhD candidate Rob Weiner, both in the Department of Agricultural Sciences Education and Communication.

USDA: Drop in Cash Receipts Leads to Lower Net Farm Income

By ERIC PFEIFFER Hoosier Ag Today

USDA recently released a forecast for lower farm income in 2023. The net farm income estimate for 2022 was $183 billion, and the 2023 forecast is $141.3 billion. A major factor driving farm income lower is smaller cash receipts.

"The crop cash receipts are forecast to fall $11.2 billion," says Carrie Litkowski, a senior economist with USDA's Economic Research Service. "When combined with the change in inventory adjustments for crops, the value of crop production is forecast to decrease by $.08 billion. That's less than a one percent decline. Animal and animal products receipts, which I often refer to as livestock receipts, are forecast to fall $11.9 billion with just a small adjustment for changes in inventory."

Litkowski says the drop in cash receipts comes from lower prices and quantities sold.

"The primary factor behind the expected decline in cash receipts in 2023 is lower prices received by farmers for their commodity production. In 2023, total cash receipts are forecast to fall $20 billion due to lower prices, with a smaller change due to lower quantity sold on net. In total, cash receipts are forecast to decrease by $23 billion. Most of the decline in quantity sold is from animal and animal product receipts in 2023. But still, most of the decline in livestock receipts is due to lower prices."

And we all know that the cost of production isn't going down.

"Production expenses are forecast to increase $29.5 billion in 2023, which would lower net farm income because we subtract out expenses in the calculation of net income," Litkowski explains. "Additionally, government payments are forecast to fall $2.9 billion, and all other changes represent the forecast increase in farm-related income of $2.3 billion."

Litkowski does add that despite lower net income this year, the farm economy remains strong.
